LEAN is a process that Owners are bringing to their construction projects to drive out many types of waste that have historically plagued projects.

For public projects, which have more restrictions, or private ones, starting the LEAN process may seem daunting for Owners, as well as design, engineering and construction professionals.

These experienced LEAN users can guide you through the process, by sharing successful approaches, and lessons learned, including Owner presentations about their first LEAN projects. Whether you want to start gradually, or jump in with both feet, let them show you how it's done.

This course includes presentations by instructors and owners, interactive exercises, and a panel discussion.

To prepare you for the course, you will receive some “Points to Ponder” when you submit your registration.

INSTRUCTORS:

Dick Cowan has 45 years of building experience using many alternative methods. He is a Professional Engineer, a Certified Project Management Professional, a Designated Design Build Professional, an Accredited LEED Professional, and member of the Lean Construction Institute. He has worked on projects for federal, state and local agencies throughout the US and overseas, including two federal P3 projects overseas.

Dick has executed LEAN Team projects in Vacaville and Sacramento for public owners and is currently performing Design Build projects for Catholic Healthcare West and LA USD.

George Zettel is Manager of Lean Construction, working for Turner since 2003. He is currently on the Core Team for an Integrated Project Delivery team designing and building the 140 bed UHS Temecula Valley Hospital in Temecula, CA, and also helps Turner's project teams with improvement projects throughout Southwest. He's on AGC's Lean Construction Steering Committee, and the National Board of Directors for the Lean Construction Institute.

George has 28 years of industry experience including roles in the building trades, construction supervision, project management, and as a facility owner.

Michael Flores is a partner with Capital Program Management, Incorporated. He has 20 years of industry experience in both the K-12 education and telecommunications markets. He has worked on projects throughout the United States and Mexico.

Michael is a member of the Lean Construction Institute, and has implemented Lean on nearly two dozen projects acting as an Owner's Representative on behalf of his clients.

Michael is a Lean facilitator for project teams throughout the state of California.
